Problem Statement:

Students at the University of South Carolina don't have a reliable way to find out information about the dining halls on campus. While there are resources on the school's website, it is difficult to navigate and feels less trustworthy than the advice of a peer.

Who is experiencing the problem?

Newer students on campus and students with dietary restrictions both experience this problem.

What is the problem?

The resources available to students about the dining halls are confusing and untrustworthy.

Where does the problem present itself?

The problem presents itself on the University of South Carolina Columbia campus.

Why does it matter?

In order for the school to maintain its reputation as the #1 First Year Experience, those with dietary restrictions should be able to find food they can enjoy easily.
